

FOUNDER MINDSET

01 / 08

Your business isn't you.

That distinction
changed everything for me.

Many founders unknowingly tie their self-worth to their business.

“

For years, every setback felt personal.

A slow month felt like failure.

A mistake felt like proof

I wasn't good enough.

Your feelings were valid.

But your business isn't your feelings.

Then I started treating my business like a product.

Something to improve.
Not something that defined me.

01

PRODUCTS GET TESTED.

They evolve, improve, and adapt based on feedback — not emotion.
That's the framework.

02

PRODUCTS CAN FAIL WITHOUT MAKING YOU A FAILURE.

Bad results are data,
not identity.
Iterate. Don't internalize.

03

PRODUCTS ARE BUILT WITH SYSTEMS.

Not emotions.

Not ego.

Not assumptions.

THE RESULT

The less personal it became...

- The better decisions I made.
- The clearer I became.
- The faster it grew.

Objectivity is a superpower.

Most founders never develop it because they're too close.

Your business is something you build.

Not something you are.

The separation may be uncomfortable.
But it's where real growth begins.

JOIN THE CONVERSATION

Have you ever tied your self-worth to your business?

Tell me in the comments ↓